DETAILED ACTION

Response to Arguments

Applicant's arguments filed 01/26/09 have been fully considered but they are not persuasive.

The Applicant's representative discloses that the Taylor reference does not partition the chamber into productive and non-productive portions. Additionally, the Applicant's representative discloses that Taylor does not teach the step of spacing a distal face of the inflatable partitioning element from a region of the ventricular wall defining the non-productive ventricular chamber. The Examiner disagrees with the Applicant's representative point of view. For example, the Applicant's representative has not limited the meaning of the words productive and non-productive in the claims. The Applicant's representative has not disclosed that the implant creates a chamber that distinguishes the productive and non-productive regions. The Applicant's representative is only mentioning productive and non-productive portions not chambers. For the above reasons the Examiner believes that the area that is in contact with the inner walls of the heart and not in direct contact with the open ventricular chamber is the non-productive portion and the area that is in direct contact with the ventricular chamber is the productive portion. In order to overcome the rejection the applicant's representative has to add structure limitations in order to distinguish the prior art with respect to the application.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 102

The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

Art Unit: 3774

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless –

(e) the invention was described in (1) an application for patent, published under section 122(b), by another filed in the United States before the invention by the applicant for patent or (2) a patent granted on an application for patent by another filed in the United States before the invention by the applicant for patent, except that an international application filed under the treaty defined in section 351(a) shall have the effects for purposes of this subsection of an application filed in the United States only if the international application designated the United States and was published under Article 21(2) of such treaty in the English language.

Claims 47-51, 72-73 and 93 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(e) as being anticipated by Taylor US Patent 6,547,821 B1.

Taylor discloses A method of treating a patient with congestive heart failure, comprising: providing a device comprising an inflatable partitioning element (113) with a peripheral edge (see attachment) and at least one anchoring element (outer wall surface of balloon) positioning the device within a ventricular chamber of the patient's heart; inflating the inflatable partitioning element with an inflation fluid engaging the peripheral edge of the inflatable partitioning element with a wall of the ventricular chamber to partition the chamber into productive and non-productive portions; and spacing a distal face of the inflatable partitioning element from a region of a ventricular wall defining at least in part the non-productive ventricular chamber.
